When the liquor he suddenly emptied the poison which he had just procured into the tumbler, and, raising it to his lips, he drank it. Beatty, who had witnessed the movement, was alarmed and knocked the glass out of his hand. They left the place together and went to the residence of Beatty, at about one o'clock on Myrtle avenue. Beatty went home and remained there a short while, when he again called for the police surgeon, who arrived at about one o'clock on Myrtle avenue, where he asked for two drachms of corrosive sublimate, representing that he required it for the purpose of treating a patient who had been poisoned.
